Dear Mr. Brown:

Your letter of 30 July 1991 arrived two days ago.

I respect your opinions on environmental sensitivity. However, I am certain you understand that I should not embark on our study with my mind made up in accordance with the views you express.

The questions you ask are interesting and abstract. I would prefer not to make a formal reply now, but will look forward to discussing these with you some time when we will undoubtedly get together in the future. On the same occasion we could also talk about any differences that may have arisen between what I said in my Introductory Remarks and your interpretation.

Thank you for your good wishes. They are greatly needed.

Sincerely yours,

I. Broder, M.D.
